

Mark D. Miles
President and CEO
Central Indiana Corporate Partnership, Inc.

Mark Miles is President and Chief Executive Officer of the Central Indiana Corporate Partnership, Inc. ("CICP"), a regional alliance of corporate CEOs and university presidents focused on long-term growth and economic development throughout the Central Indiana region. CICP advocates policy direction and engages in collaborative efforts to address issues facing the region. CICP encourages region-wide planning and goal setting in both the public and private sectors that recognize the interdependence of the entire area. The organization also develops objective data and analyses that lead to an informed consensus about activities that help Central Indiana businesses to become more globally competitive. Initiatives under the CICP umbrella include BioCrossroads, TechPoint, Conexus Indiana and The Indy Partnership.

Miles also serves as Chairman of the Indianapolis 2012 Super Bowl Host Committee Board of Directors. In May 2008, he led a successful effort to earn Indianapolis the right to host the 2012 Super Bowl, which was awarded by a vote of the NFL's 32 team owners.
